Three student publications are officially recognized by the University: The Log, The Contraband, and Arena.

The Log is the official yearbook of the University. A student editor and production staff are selected each year and tasked with the responsibility of capturing the academic year in an attractive and meaningful publication. Fees collected from students support the yearbook's production and provide for a copy for students who wish to receive it. The Log office is located in the Holbrook Student Union.

The Contraband is the official student newspaper of the University. A student editor, production and advertising sales staff are selected each year and are charged with producing multiple weekly editions of the newspaper each fall and spring term. Fees collected from students support the newspaper's production, which is supplemented by the sale of advertising to interested businesses and individuals. The University's director of public information and communications serves as advisor to the yearbook and newspaper. The Contraband office is located in the Holbrook Student Union.

The Arena is an artistic and literary student journal published in the spring term each academic year. McNeese students may offer submissions including photographs, photographs of pottery and paintings, poems, essays, and short stories for consideration. An editor is chosen from among the members of Sigma Tau Delta English honor society. A faculty member from the College of Liberal Arts serves as advisor.
